Lecture 23 Double Comparatives

Double Comparatives

Double comparatives show a cause and effect relationship. They are great for showing trends as well as the relationship and connection between two things.

If we leave sooner, I can sleep earlier.

The sooner we leave, the earlier I can sleep.

When you are younger, it is easier to learn English.

The younger you are, the easier it is to learn English.

When you are experienced, you can find a job more easily.

The more experienced you are, the easier it is to find a job.

Double Comparatives

We can use Double Comparatives for one of our reasons or their explanations:

When one travels to these challenging attractions, they are likely to appear more patient and calm in face of crises such as financial problems.

The more one travels to these challenging attractions, the more patient and calm they are likely to appear in face of crises such as financial problems.

When the young are accustomed to anxiety, they can cope with stress better.

The more the young are accustomed to anxiety, the better they can cope with stress.
